ABSTRACT

This bibliography was developed as a resource for those seeking information about the dilemma of balancing obligations to work and family and alternative approaches that provide support to parents in the workplace. It contains references to recent Canadian and American publications, including books, journal articles, and periodicals, and also to select older items. Citations are listed in 12 categories in the Canadian section and 10 categories in the American. The 100 references in the Canadian list concern work and family, child care issues, workplace initiatives, options for employer support, program resources, alternative work arrangements and schedules, leaves and benefits, union involvement, implications for taxes, research on effects on the workplace, research on needs assessment, and bibliographies. The 87 citations in the American list concern most of the same topics, and also cover counseling and parent education, and sick child care. (RH)

INTRODUCTION

This Employer-Supported Child Care Bibliography has been developed as a resource for those seeking information about the work and family dilemma and the alternatives for providing support to parents in the workplace. As such, it contains references to fairly recent publications (books, journal articles, periodicals), and select older items on these topics, from both Canadian and American sources. New additions to this Bibliography are welcome as it will be updated periodically. Additions to and requests for copies of this Bibliography may be directed to :
